With the snow and cold sweeping across the Big Country, closing schools and canceling everything from buses to community programs, a lively family outing seems just the thing to brighten things up.

Take the whole gang to see Circus Gatti's "Shazoom" production at the Taylor County Expo Center Coliseum on Friday and Saturday. There are two shows each day and the circus offers free tickets for children for the first daily show.

Circus Gatti brings back the circus days of old, with three rings featuring traditional acrobatic performances, plenty of clowns and of course, what would any circus be without elephants.

Other acts include Pompayo's K-9 dogs, an aerial ballet by lady butterflies and motorcycle daredevils who race around inside a circular cage.

The Circus Gatti Web site has a page just for kids, where youngsters can print out a picture to color. If they bring the colored picture to the performance, their names are entered into a prize drawing.
